What materials are used in lithium ion batteries?

Lithium, cobalt, nickel, and graphite are integral materials in the composition of lithium-ion batteries (LIBs) for electric vehicles. This paper is one of a five-part series of working papers that maps out the global value chains for these four key materials.

Will lithium ion battery production increase by 2030?

Lithium-ion battery production is expected to be 3X by 2030, increasing from 2,000 GWh/year in 2023 to 7,300 GWh/year. This growth will meet the EV battery demand of 4,300 GWh/year by 2030 under a 1.5°C climate scenario. This projected growth includes operational factories, construction projects, and announced plans.

What is the market share order for lithium ion batteries in 2030?

Overall, in 2030 the market share order for the Li-ion battery sector is very likely to be NMC in first place with a 35% market share, followed by LFP and NCA with a 40% combined market share, and finally LCO and LMO. Battery cell prices will strongly depend on these highlighted developments.

How much cobalt does the Li-ion battery industry consume?

The Li-ion battery industry consumes around 30% of current global cobalt supply, a share that is rapidly increasing; this sector consumed 37,000t cobalt in 2016 but will require estimated 76,000t in 2025.

What are the GVCs for lithium cobalt and graphite?

Accordingly, these four materials' complex and differentiated global value chains (GVCs) have garnered extensive interest. This paper is one of a five-part series of working papers that map out the GVCs for lithium, cobalt, nickel, and graphite that are used in LIBs for EVs.

Are lithium-ion batteries the future of electric vehicles?

Beyond this application, lithium-ion batteries are the preferred option for the emerging electric vehicle sector, while still underexploited in power supply systems, especially in combination with photovoltaics and wind power.
